Adapted from chapter 1 : A Little Princess, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Oxford Bookworms, Oxford University Press

Read the following text:

A Little Princess by Frances Hodgson Burnett

One cold winter day a little girl and her father arrived in London. Sara Crewe was seven years old, and she had long black hair and green eyes. She sat in the cab next to her father and looked out of the window at the tall houses and dark sky.

“What are you thinking about, Sara?” Mr. Crewe asked. “You are very quiet.” He put his arm around his daughter.

“I’m thinking about our house in India,” said Sara, “And the hot sun and the blue sky”. I don’t think I like England very much, Father”.

“Yes, it’s very different from India,” her father said. “But you must go to school in London, and I must go back to India and work.

.../... Soon they arrived at Miss Minchin’s School for Girls and went into the big house. Miss Minchin was a tall woman in a black dress. She looked at Sara, and then gave a very big smile. “What a beautiful child!” she said to Mr. Crewe.

Sara stood quietly and watched Miss Minchin. Why does she say that?” she thought. “I am not beautiful, so why does she say it?”

Sara was not beautiful, but her father was rich. And Miss Minchin liked girls with rich fathers, because it was good for the school.
